THE ROYAL HOSPITAL CHELSEA

Founded in 1682 by King Charles II and designed by Sir Christopher Wren, the Royal Hospital was built as a 'retreat for veterans broken by age and war'. For over 330 years it has been providing care for former soldiers of the British Army and is home to the famous scarlet-coated Chelsea Pensioners. Set in the heart of fashionable Chelsea, a stone's throw from the King's Road and with stunning views across the Thames, the Royal Hospital offers a range of versatile indoor and outdoor spaces for celebrations and special events. The Grade I and II* Heritage Listed buildings house exquisite period interiors that feature a wealth of architectural detail; whilst outside, spacious, and elegant courtyards create the perfect setting for any occasion. In addition to its beautiful surroundings, the Royal Hospital can provide a team of multi-disciplined, dedicated, and experienced events specialists to ensure that any occasion is truly memorable.

THE GREAT HALL

A dining room designed by Sir Christopher Wren, the Great Hall is the largest of the interior spaces at the Royal Hospital and is still used daily by the Chelsea Pensioners. It has changed little in its 330 years and retains an imposing air of grandeur with magnificent oak panelling and paintings of British monarchs, including Antonio Verrio's striking seventeenth century mural of King Charles II.
